

THE LEIDEN
COLLECTION

---

Little Girl at a Table Holding a Slice of Melon

Gerard ter Borch the Elder (Zwolle 1582/83 – 1652 Zwolle)

ca. early 1630s

black chalk, brown ink washes and black ink, applied with brush point

12.1 x 8.9 cm

inscribed on verso with a collector's mark: "No 29 Terbourg"

GB-110

---

How To Cite

Schatborn, Peter. "Little Girl at a Table Holding a Slice of Melon." In The Leiden Collection Catalogue. Edited by Arthur K. Wheelock Jr. New York, 2017.

<https://www.theleidencollection.com/archive/>.

This page is available on the site's Archive. PDF of every version of this page is available on the Archive, and the Archive is managed by a permanent URL. Archival copies will never be deleted. New versions are added only when a substantive change to the narrative occurs.

---

The girl holding a slice of melon in both hands looks to her right, where something apparently has grabbed her attention. More fruit, or some other unidentifiable food, lie in front of her. She wears a wide white collar over her dress; her hair is tied behind her head with a bow, but some loose strands hang over her forehead. Gerard ter Borch the Younger laid in the drawing with black chalk and then worked it up in pen and brown ink, sometimes to reinforce the contours. He also applied a brown wash to shade one side of the girl's face and to cover the background. This wash strengthens the effect of light falling on her face and clothing.

Apart from landscapes drawn in Italy,<sup>[1]</sup> Ter Borch made only a few known drawings “from life.” Among these is a group from the early 1630s, to which this work belongs, in which he depicted the two daughters he had with his second wife, Geesken van Voerst (1599–in or before 1628).<sup>[2]</sup> The elder daughter, Anna, was born on 27 October 1622, and the younger, Sara, on 23 July 1624.<sup>[3]</sup> Even though he later had more daughters with his third wife, none of them is likely to be the subject of this drawing, as they were not born until the second half of the 1630s. Furthermore, Ter Borch made very few drawings after the mid-1630s, which bolsters the argument that this work dates from the early 1630s.<sup>[4]</sup>

Gerard ter Borch the Elder had a number of children, all of whom drew under his supervision, no doubt taking his drawings as their example. Drawing from life, particularly the human figure, was, like drawing from the imagination, an important part of artistic instruction. Ter Borch frequently annotated and dated the drawings made by his sons Gerard the Younger (1617–81), Harmen (1638–77), and Mozes (1645–67), and in a number of instances he noted that they had been made “from life.” On the verso of Gerard the Younger's drawing Head of a Girl, he wrote “15 December 1633.”<sup>[5]</sup> This work, and a comparable drawing of a young girl, may have been inspired by Gerard the Elder's Little Girl at a Table Holding a Slice of Melon, and, indeed, may represent the same model.<sup>[6]</sup> Watching his father draw the girls may well have prompted Gerard the Younger to execute his own versions.

Gerard the Elder's drawing probably depicts Sara. She is likely also portrayed in the drawing Bust-Length Portrait of a Girl with a Necklace, in Amsterdam's Rijksprentenkabinet (fig 1). Her face was slightly less narrow than that of her sister Anna,<sup>[7]</sup> who is depicted—looking somewhat

Comparative Figures

Fig 1. Gerard ter Borch the Elder, Head of a Little Girl Wearing a Necklace, Bending Forward, early 1630s, pen and brown ink, brush and gray wash over traces of black chalk, Rijksprentenkabinet, Amsterdam, inv. no. RP-T-1887-A-768

Fig 2. Gerard ter Borch the Elder, Head of a Little Girl Wearing a Necklace, early 1630s, pen and brush and brown ink, brush and yellow-brown wash, Rijksprentenkabinet, Amsterdam, inv. no. BI-1887-1463, fol. 139b older—in the drawing Girl Reading, likewise in Amsterdam.<sup>[8]</sup> The girl wearing a necklace has the same spontaneous look and loose wisps of hair gracing her forehead as the girl in the present drawing. She is shown wearing a necklace again in a drawing in an album—likewise preserved in Amsterdam—later compiled by her younger half-sister, Gesina ter Borch (1631–90) (fig 2).<sup>[9]</sup>

It was not unusual for Dutch artists, Rembrandt among them, to seek models from their immediate family circle. Nevertheless, this practice was particularly evident in the Ter Borch family. Not only did Ter Borch the Elder regularly depict his children, but Gerard the Younger also portrayed Sara, Gesina,<sup>[10]</sup> and his half-brother Mozes.<sup>[11]</sup> Surviving works by Mozes include drawings he made of his parents<sup>[12]</sup> and of Gesina.<sup>[13]</sup>

The drawings in Amsterdam come from the Ter Borch family estate, which remained intact until the late nineteenth century before it was finally sold at auction in 1886.<sup>[14]</sup> Most of those works were subsequently acquired by the Rijksmuseum. It was Gesina who preserved this estate, which also included the drawings and watercolors she made along with those by her siblings, which had been kept by their father.<sup>[15]</sup> Altogether these drawings, which number more than a thousand, present a unique picture of a studio legacy that has no parallel in work from the seventeenth century. It is likely that the hundred or so drawings by members of the Ter Borch family that can be found in other collections had already been sold or given away in the seventeenth century.

-Peter Schatborn

Endnotes

1. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: GSr 4-31.
2. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: XVII, GSr 107, 108; 2: Appendix 1: 1, 2.
3. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: GSr 107
4. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: under GSr 107, note 1.
5. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: GJr 30.
6. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: GJr 30 and 31.
7. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: GSr 108.
8. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: GSr 107.
9. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 2: Gs 62, Family Scrapbook, fol. 139. On fol. 136, where she is portrayed with an older woman, she also wears a necklace, as indeed she does in a drawing in a private collection in Amsterdam.
10. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: GJr 78.
11. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: GJr 97-81.
12. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: M 53 and 54.
13. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: M 56.
14. See foreword by J. W. Niemeijer in Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: VII.
15. Alison McNeil Kettering, Drawings from the Ter Borch Studio Estate, 2 vols. (The Hague, 1988), 1: XXIX.

Provenance

- (Sale, Christie's, New York, 29 January 2009, no. 44, as by Gerard Ter Borch II [Bob Habeldt & Co., New York, 2009]).
- From whom acquired by the present owner.

Technical Summary

The support, a thin, off-white laid paper trimmed on all sides, has been adhered to a toned laid paper secondary support along all but the right corner and at three sites in the center and has been float matted. A collector's stamp in black ink is located along the lower left of the reverse of the drawing, and the mat reverse is inscribed "No 29 Terbourg."

The design is a study in light and dark executed in a monochromatic palette. A pale brown wash forms the preparatory layer, over which a black chalk underdrawing maps out the composition. This is followed by layers of transparent brown wash applied in small brush strokes of varying density, and lastly contours, facial features, and shadows of the hair were added in black ink applied with the point of a brush. The subtle chiaroscuro ranges from the light area with only a few strokes of black chalk in the foreground to the enveloping dark washes in the background. The freely drawn black chalk framing lines appear to have been applied after the washes.

The drawing is unsigned and undated.

The drawing underwent conservation treatment in 2012 and remains in a very good state of preservation.<sup>[1]</sup>

Technical Summary Endnotes

1. Entry based on a 2012 examination and treatment report by Marjorie Shelley, Sherman Fairchild Conservator in Charge, Sherman Fairchild Center for Works on Paper and Photograph Conservation, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.